

Aside from all the valid technical arguments against Broadband over Power Lines the simple fact is that the FCC is incapable of regulating it. The FCC does not have the manpower that would be required to properly handle the volume of complaints that would surely arise.

"BPL" is the modern day "Snake Oil" salesman's offering. Even if it were approved it's life would be short- but probably not short enough to prevent their investors from losing.

Why the FCC commissioners ever considered BPL is incomprehensible.

Because it is- incomprehensible- I have requested my Congressman seek to conduct a Congressional Inquiry into the matter.
